

Start Crisis 2020: Election of the new President of the United States

Update 1: 2022-ish, and...

USA: One week after the US election of Cory Booker (democrat, pro-gun laws) China launches a pilot project, projecting the face of Xi Jinping into the sky in low orbit for the world to see. Further information from the USA: A Chinese broadcasting satellite collided with a British one, and was knocked off-orbit, spiraling towards Earth. It entered the atmosphere over Texas, mostly burning up. However, a few bits fell through, hitting and killing a highly endangered Ocelot near the town of Marfa, TX.

China: An attempt to censor the internet by removing Xi Jinping / Winnie the Pooh memes on a global scale has failed catastrophically. Historically divided sites such as Facebook, Reddit, Tumblr and all the different chans got together to retaliate, reviving the 2018/2019 Xi JinPooh memes, resulting in massive embarrassment and quite frankly, a PR disaster for the Chinese Communist Party.

Russia: 7 weeks ago, CNN and BBC both broadcasted images of what appears to be the construction of a Russian moon base! Rockets have been launching on a daily basis from the Baikonur Cosmodrome. However, in more important news: RT has aired a new episode in its series "Just Putin Things", depicting their beloved leader wrestling a bear in outer space. Needless to say, Putin won, and Russian euphoria is higher than ever.

Rumors have sparked in the popular Parisian newspaper Le Parisien that the headquarters of the ESA seems to be empty and no one is picking up the phone! Furthermore, an increased number of French rocket launches have been observed, but the state hasn't said much on what they contained.

India has sent its second woman to space, yay! Furthermore, it has been investing heavily in its rocket launch platforms, in an attempt to attract foreign investors. Mostly, a number of Arab states have showed interest.
